HW:

Ramparts is still going, and appears considerably more stable than it did during Warren Hinckle's tenure.

They have an excellent article, for instance, in the December issue on Henry Kissinger, quite the most illuminating I've seen.

I can't say whether anyone reads them any more, but, have the impression that they have concentrated on increasing subscriptions in the past two years rather than on street sales.

Also I have no idea whether they pay anything. If they do, it probably wouldn't be much.

Their present editorial office is at 2054 University Ave., Berkeley, 94704, phone (415) 849-4771. Their publication notice says unsolicited manuscripts must be sent with stamped, self-addressed envelope to insure return, and carries the ususal statement that no responsibility is assumed for unsolicited material, and that second copies should be retained by the writer.
